AMI software Ltd today announced the formal opening of its new UK office in Cambridge and the registering of its new company AMI Software Ltd.

UK General Manager, Mike Alderton said “we have taken the decision to open the new business now due some significant recent developments in our product line and a very real increased demand for our technology from UK organisations.

Our latest offering AMI Enterprise Intelligence v2 automates all five of the key processes necessary for deploying wide ranging Decision Intelligence Management solutions, namely Search, Collect, Publish, Share and Analyse in one integrated platform from a single point of access. It’s unique not only in its ability to intelligently understand relevance and derive meaning from data across all internal and external sources but also in terms of providing the mechanisms for dynamically analysing and sharing that information across the Enterprise. AMI provides comprehensively improved decision making capabilities based on the broadest, most accurately targeted, relevant and up-to-date information available”.

GoAlbert’s CEO, Alain Beauvieux said “the move to formalise our UK operations represents part of a planned expansion building on our established European presence and customer base. The experience of the people who drive the UK’s knowledge based economy is renowned the world over and represents considerable export revenue. It has been clear for many months through talking to our UK colleagues and prospective customers that there are significant information initiatives being planned and driven at the highest level. Together with our own understanding of the market we have listened carefully to feedback about current and future requirements and have developed our products accordingly. We are very well placed to meet those requirements”.
